$\text{Affordable access}$

New this year, the Generation Next fee waiver alleviates the requirement for first-generation students to pay Wayne State’s $25 application fee. The Generation Next fee waiver follows the 2017 launch of the Wayne Access Award, which helps eligible incoming freshmen with the most unmet need cover the cost of tuition and fees. The Wayne Access Award is renewable for up to four years, and covers up to the full cost of tuition and fees in combination with federal, state and other institutional aid.

Wayne State Update

FALL 2017

News from the heart of Detroit, one of the top destinations on The New York Times’ list of “52 Places to Go in 2017.”
New options for on-campus housing

To meet the increasing number of students looking to live on campus, Wayne State University is adding more on-campus housing. This fall, the Thompson Home will make its debut as a new residence hall for sophomores, juniors and seniors enrolled in the College of Fine, Performing and Communication Arts. The Victorian landmark has been renovated to include mostly double-occupancy rooms that will house approximately 65 residents, with a kitchen, dining space and lounge available on each floor. To enhance its creative environment, the Thompson Home will also feature a collaborative workspace, multi-station video-editing studio, gallery with directional lighting and more.

Additionally, Wayne State has broken ground on the new Anthony Wayne Apartments, which will feature furnished studio, one-, two- and four-bedroom units. Apartments will include a full kitchen, common area and individual bedrooms with full-size beds. Each floor will feature multiple lounge areas, and the first floor will be anchored by large community rooms, the new Campus Health Center and retail space. Phase one of this project will end with the fall 2018 opening of the 11-story tower of Anthony Wayne Apartments, with the remainder of the building scheduled for phase two completion in fall 2019. Anthony Wayne Apartments will ultimately add more than 800 beds to campus.

Making professional development our business

Construction is underway on the new Mike Ilitch School of Business, which will be unveiled in the spring of 2018. The four-story building will include an interactive finance and data analytics lab, an executive M.B.A. suite, the state-of-the-art Lear Auditorium, meeting rooms for prospective employer interviews, a rooftop terrace and more. Marking Wayne State’s first entirely new construction project outside of its main campus, the Ilitch School of Business will make its home in The District Detroit, a 50-block business, retail and entertainment destination revitalizing the area between Midtown and downtown. The Ilitch School ultimately aims to bring WSU students closer to Detroit’s business community with enhanced access to internship and career opportunities.

The 120,000-square-foot facility has been made possible by a $40 million lead investment from Mike and Marian Ilitch — the largest gift in Wayne State history, and one of the top 10 gifts ever to name a public business school in the nation.

A space for STEM success

STEM Commons has been designed to help undergraduate students thrive in their STEM classes and prepare them for successful careers. This new learning facility recently launched in the Science and Engineering Library at our main campus in Midtown. With a variety of flexible, collaborative spaces, STEM Commons offers an array of resources to aid Warriors. Here, students can study independently or in a group setting, and they are able to reserve different areas for privacy. Students can also use STEM Commons to attend traditional review sessions for specific courses, or participate in fun “brain game” competitions. Additionally, students have the opportunity to receive help from advanced undergraduate students who have been trained as peer mentors, and meet with professors and TAs during office hours.

Passionate about sharing their talents with others, Warriors are enriching communities and fostering artistic expression in a variety of ways. One example is our mobile arts workshop, an annual collaboration between Wayne State’s James Pearson Duffy Department of Art and Art History, The Carr Center, and Detroit Parks and Recreation. At each workshop, College of Fine, Performing and Communication Arts students like Shelbie Wright guide participants between the ages of 12 and 18 as they learn about abstract art and 3-D design fundamentals through sculptural and digital processes.

“A lot of the students we reach out to do not have regular art programs at their schools,” observes Wright, who assists undergraduate students. “Many are in awe over their creations as well as their ability to make something,” she says. “We often encounter students who are shy to the arts and don’t know how to approach the process of making — some even believe that they are not creative at all — but by the end of our session, they are very excited to share what they have made.”

The wheel deal

Warriors have a new way to explore the Motor City, thanks to MoGo. The new bike share service makes it easier — and more efficient — than ever to zip through the city, with 43 stations throughout Detroit (five of which are located on or near Wayne State’s campus). Information about pricing, including the $5 Access Pass, is available at raise.me/join/wayne-state.

Guide to greatness

We want Warriors to stay connected and on track through graduation. That’s why we recommend that they download Guide – College Simplified, a free mobile app for Wayne State students that is available in the App Store and Google Play. Guide can help students find the best major, give reminders for key dates, offer tips on everything from student organizations to paying for college, and keep students in-the-know about campus resources, events and engagement opportunities. We like to think of it as a personal coach to help Warriors succeed in and out of the classroom.
